TEXT:
 ANCHORAGE, Alaska -- Alaska's notoriously frigid winters have propelled its largest supermarket operator to make a special effort to fight hunger.

Carr Gottstein Foods here presented $40,000 to eight Alaska food banks and rescue missions, culminating a 10-week fund-raising drive that took place in the final months of 1996.

In the program, called "Swipe Away Hunger," customers at Carrs Quality Centers could use tear-off coupons at checkout counters to make donations. Each coupon scanned added $2 to the customer's grocery bill. Customers rang up about $30,000 in donations during the campaign, and the company added $10,000 to the effort, said Anne Bridges, director of consumer affairs at Carr Gottstein.

Bridges said all the money collected was donated to anti-hunger efforts. Since the cost of a meal at a hunger-relief agency is $2, the money will pay for 20,000 meals in Alaskan communities.

Although summers are mild, Alaskan winters are long and can see temperatures drop to minus 40, she said.

"It's bad enough being homeless, but we have winter seven months a year," Bridges said. "Because of our climate, the need for hot food and shelter is very important. We have many deaths due to hypothermia." Alaskans who have alcohol problems are especially susceptible to hypothermia, Bridges added.

The recipients of the money are Bean's Cafe and Brother Francis Shelter, both in Anchorage; Fairbanks Rescue Mission, Fairbanks; Southeast Food Bank, Juneau; Food Bank of Palmer, Palmer; Food Pantry, Wasilla; Salvation Army, Ketchikan; and Kenai Peninsula Food Bank, Kenai. Each agency received all the money collected at its nearest store, plus an additional donation from Carrs Quality Centers, Bridges said.

Bridges said the company wanted to minimize overhead, so there was no promotion other than signs at checkout lanes. Cashiers were trained to answer customer questions about the program.

Bridges said the company supports other efforts on a year-round basis. In 1995, Carr Gottstein gave 1.9 billion pounds of food to Alaskan food banks.

Carr Gottstein President and Chief Executive Officer Lawrence H. Hayward presented checks to the hunger relief agencies earlier this month in the produce/floral section of the Aurora Village Carrs Quality Center.
